

Queer Peace International Marks the International Day Against Homophobia

May 17th, 2006

Around the world, thousands of lesbian, gay men, bisexuals and transgendered do not have equal access to health, education/training, social development programming that is provided to other minority groups and women.

They cannot access these services and supports due to the social prejudice and legal discrimination that 'dis-ables' LGBT people in local communities.

Queer Peace International encourages you to take a moment and think about the openness and safety to:

- discuss with your physician the very personal issues that affect your health
- introduce how your community, regardless of class, ethnicity, gender and ability, can be affected by certain education, workshops or training forums
- bring your partner/special person to a social event organized through work or community centre without fear of persecution

Please join Queer Peace International in commemorating this battle that can be often be forgotten in our daily lives. For more information about Queer Peace International, or to provide a donation or lend some of your time to the organization, please visit our website at www.queerpeace.org.

Only together can we end homophobia around the world and improve the lives of LGBT people.
